Jesús Rafael Soto (Ciudad Bolívar, Venezuela, 1923 – Paris, France, 2005) was one of the leading exponents of kinetic art. After attending the Escuela de Artes Plásticas in Caracas (1942 to 1947), he directed the Escuela de Bellas Artes in Maracaibo, Venezuela, until 1950, when he received a scholarship to study in Paris. In the French capital, Soto associated with figures such as Yaacov Agam, Jean Tinguely, and Victor Vasarely, as well as other artists linked to the Nouveaux Réalistes, and to the Denise René Gallery – where the artist participated in the historic exhibition Le Mouvement (1955), considered the epicenter of the artistic movement defined by art that moves or appears to move.

In his early works, Soto already sought to go beyond the representation of two-dimensional geometric forms and introduce movement through repetition. By 1957, the artist had shifted to a more gestural abstraction, but by 1965 he had definitively returned to a geometric idiom. During the same decade, he began making linear kinetic constructions using industrial and synthetic materials, such as nylon, perspex, steel, and industrial paint. In 1967, he produced his first Penetrable, an immersive installation composed of nylon threads suspended in space that invited the public to enter and walk through, activating the artwork.

Throughout his career, Soto achieved significant international recognition, participating in major exhibitions such as the Venice Biennale (1958, 1964, and 1966) and Documenta (1968). Jesús Rafael Soto's first major solo exhibitions took place in 1968 at the Kunsthalle Bern, and in 1969 at the Stedelijk Museum in Amsterdam. Prior to that, in 1965, the artist had already presented a solo exhibition at the Signals Gallery in London.

In the following decades, he presented his work in prominent institutions such as the Museum of Contemporary Art, Chicago (1971), the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum in New York (1974), the National Museum of Modern Art at the Centre Georges Pompidou in Paris (1979), and the Museo de Arte Contemporáneo de Caracas (1983).
